Bill Arp Addresses his Constituents.

RESPEKTFUL PEEPLE:

I address you on this okashun with a profound admiration for the great consideration and the nice discrimination which caused you to honor me by your votes with a seat in the Sinate of Georgy. For two momentus and inspirun weeks the Legislature hav been in solem, session, one of whom I am proud to be which. For several days we were engaged as skouts, makin a sorter rekonysance to see whether Georgy were a State or a Injun terrytory—whether we were in the old Un-ion, or out of it—whether me and my fokes and you and your fokes were somebody or nobody, and, lastly, but by no means leastly, whether our poor innocent children, born during the war, were all illegal and had to be born over agin or not.—This last pint are much unsettled, but our women are advised to be kalm and screen.

My friends, our aim hav honestly been to git you all back in the folds of the glorious old Un-ion. Like the prodygal son, we had nuthin to live on, and feelin lonesome and hungry, have been bowin and scrapin and making apoligies for five or six months. We hav been seen standin afur off for weeks, but durn the calt do they kill for us. They know we've got nothin, for they eat up our substance, and as for puttin rings on our fingers, we couldent expekt it until they bring back the jewelry they carryed away. I cannot say, in the langwidge of the poet, that our labor hav been a labor of love, for we've had monstrous poor encouragement to be shore; but we had all set our heads towards the stars and stripes, and we jintly determind that come wool come wo, sink or swim, survive or perish, thunder or litenin, we'd slip back, or sneak back, or git back somehow or somehow else, or we'd stay out forever and ever amen, and be hanged to em, so-called, I golly.

Up to this time it hav been an up hill bisness. The team was a good one and the gear all sound and the wagin greased, but the road are perhaps the ruffest, rottenest cordyroy in the world. It's pull up and skotch, and pull up and skotch, and ever and anonymus the skotch slips out and the tung cuts round and away we go into the gully. Andy Jonsin is the driver, and he says "Go slow," and he hollers "Wo! wo!" and loses the road, and then we hav to go back to the fork and wait till he blazes the way. He seem to be doin his best, but then thar is Sumner and Satan and Stevens and Davis and other like gentlemen, who keep hollerin at him and crackin his whip, and confusin his idees, so that sometimes we don't know whether he's gee-in or haw-in. My friends, about them fellers, I don't know what I ort to say. If you do, or if anybody does, I wish they would say it. I don't encourage cussin in nobody, not at all, but if you know of a man that can't be broke of it durin his nateral life, it mout be well to hire him by the year. If ther is in all history a good exkuse and a proper subjek, it is upon them hartless, soulless, bowelless, gizzardless, fratrisidel, suicidel, parasidel, sistersidel, abominabul, contemptibul, disgustibul individuals. I sometimes think of em till my brain gits sorter addled, and I feel like becumin a volunteer convikt of the Lunatik Asylorum. Charity inclines me to the opinyun that old Sumner are crazy. I think he has been gittin worse ever since he took Brooks on the brain, and it do seem like the disease have proved contagus. If they are for Peace it must be the Peace that passeth all understandin, for we cant fathom it in these regions. They fout us to free the poor nigger but diden't keer for the Union. The Western boys fout us for the Union but diden't keer for the nigger. By double teamin on us they licked us and we gin it up, but now the one don't want our niggers and the other dont want our Union, and its the hardest skedule to pleas them both that a poor vanished peepul ever undertook. Its the most hardest war to wind up that history rekords. Sumner, Satan and Company, are still a fussin and fumin about the everlastin nigger—want him to vote and make laws, and squat on a jewry, and want to perhibit us rebels from doing the same thing for 30 years to cum! Jerusalem! where is the cussing man? They say its all right for a nigger not to vote in Connecticut, bekaus there ain't but a few of em thar; and its all wrong for em not to vote in Georgy bekaus theres a heap of em here, and they talk Logik and Retorik amazin to prove how it is. Well I haint got a whole passel of sense like sum, but as shore as I'm two foot high a nigger is a nigger, I don't keer where you smell him, and a vote is a vote I don't keer whar you drop it.—I golly! they cant git over that.

The truth is, my feller sitizens, I sometimes feel like we dident hav no goverment. I felt that way sorter when Mr. Gibson appointed me a committee on the State of the Republik.—When the Sekretary read out my name all mixed up with the Republik, I felt that I was obleeged to renig. Risin magestikully to my feet, says I, "Mr. President, I beg to be respektybly exkused sur, if you pleyse. If that is any Republik on this side of Jordin I cant purseve it at this time with these speks. Thar was a place in old Virginny called Port Republik, but Mr. Rebel General Stonewall Jackson wiped out its contents generally in 1863, and I havent sinse heard of it in Northern literature. I have heard of a skrub consarn over about Washington they call a Republik, but, sur, it are likely to prove the grandest imposture that ever existed on a continent of freedom. I suppose, sur, it are to be moved to Boston or the infernal regions in a few days and I want nuthin to do with it. Exkuse me, sur, but I must insist on being respektably discharged." I took my seat amid the most profoundest and tumultuous silence ever seed, and Mr. Gibson remarked that he would-ent impose the Republik on the respektable man agin his wishes. He then transferd me to the Finants Committee, and sed he hoped we would take immediate action, for the State had no moncy, as well as himself, and board was high and eat seteras frequent. This may not hav been his exaktual langwidge, but is anglin toward it. I bowd my head and said "Ditto, exsep that I don't eat seteras." Forthwith I telegrafd varyous gentlemen for a temporary loan, but they wouldent lend a dollar untill Mr. Jenkins wer norgorated, for they wanted his name to the note. Thinks, says I, there's a tup lost about the wagin. If we are a State, we can borry money in Augusty. If we ain't a State, its none of our bisiness to borry it at all. If Andy wants to run the machine his own way, let him pay his own expenses. What in the dickens is a Provision Government for, if it ain't to get up provisions and provide for a feller generally. I made up my mind that perhaps we had been humorin Andy about long enuf. We had as much right to a Governor as Alabama or South Callina. He wants us back about as bad as we want to get back, and a litter badder, perhaps; and he needent put on so many unnecessary airs about this Senator bisness. If he tools with us much, we won't elect nobody—I golly! we'll take the studs and go backwards. I forthwith returned to the Capitol, and stretchin forth one of my arms, ses I, "Mr. Gibson, sur—I'm your friend—I'm the friend of your wife and children; but if Mr. Jenkins ain't norgerated soon the State will collapse; a bright, and glorious star will be obliterated from off the striped rag, and the President will lose about nine supporters in the Federal Congress. I move, sur, that if we can't git our Governor at once like a sine qua non, we break up in a row and depart for Mexico." It took like the small-pox, and were carryed tumultuously. These proceedins were telegrafd to Washington before the ink was dry, and we received orders forwith to norgurate our Governor and roll on our cart. Then the money came, and we voted ourselves a pocketful apiece, and took a furlo. My friends, that wur a proud and glorious day. When that great and good man was makin his affectin speech, we all felt happy; and Capen Dodds, the member from Polk, remarked that he would like to die then, for he never expected to feel as heavenly agin. The tears run down his left eye like rain. His other eye wer beat out by a Yankee soldier while the Capen wer in prison. Of course the villen wer tried for it, and hung; though I hain't seed no mention of it in the papers. Alas! poor Wirz.

My fellow-citizens, let me, in conclusion, congratulate you on havin a Governor once more, as is a Governor. Oh! there is life in the old land yet, and by and by we'll mix up with our friends North, and we'll transport them Black Republicans into the Afrikan desert, and put 'em to teachin Hottentots the right of suffrage. Winter Davis could there find a field of labor sufficient for the miserable remnant of his declinin years. If he sin't the Winter of our discontent mentioned by Mr. Shakspere, I don't know who he allooded to, and I want to git rid of him. He and his clan have done us much evil, and I am induced to exclaim in the langwidge of Paul about Alexander the coppersmith, "May the Lord reward 'em accordin to their works." More anonymus,

BILL ARP.

P. S.—Cousin John Thrasher ses he has studied law a week, and will be a candydate for sum high offis when we meet agin, provided we giv him time to sell his cotton seed. I'll say this—art hav done as much for him as for some of the candydates, and nature more, and his cotton seed are as good seed as I ever seed. I hope he will suckseed.

THE PEOPLE must be trusted with their Government, and if trusted, my opinion is that they will act in good faith, and restore their former constitutional relations with all the States composing the Union.—Andrew Johnson's Letter to Gov. Sharkey, of Mississippi.

The President's Policy---Voice of the People.

We endeavored, in our issue of yesterday, to extract a ray of hope out of the circumstance that the Reconstruction Committee had sought a conference with the President, relative to the matters with which they are charged. Subsequent intelligence has developed nothing by which to determine whether any favorable significance is to be attached to their action, or not. However that may be, there are indications, in the official messages that have been delivered during the recess of Congress, and in the daily improving tone of portions of the Northern press, that can but inspire us with confidence, which we take pleasure in imparting to our people, in the speedy and complete success of the cautious, wise and humane policy of the President. We do not know of any public utterance or message, (excepting, always, the Parthian manifesto of the puritanical bigot who has illustrated the annals of Massachusetts for a few years past,) delivered during the Christmas vacation, which has not pronounced with more or less heartiness, and in a manner more or less clear and bold, in favor of that policy.—Of course these general endorsements must have extended to the last special recommendation of the President, concerning our right to representation, as they have, most of them, been enunciated since its submission to Congress.

First, we have the New Hampshire Republican State Convention resolving specifically that "the tone and temper of the President's late annual message to Congress meet our warm approbation." In Maine, the new Governor takes ground, in his message, strongly in support of the policy of the Administration—"to the spirit and purpose of which no loyal man would utter a dissent." And the Governors of the great States of New York and Ohio follow in order; the latter going so far as to declare that "It was no part of the intention or expectation, that the noble patriots volunteering to fight the war of the Union were to be detained as a police or Swiss guard, to oversee political reforms in the South, whether as to blacks or whites."

The members of Congress thus resume their duties, under no misapprehension of the temper and judgment which the majority of the people appear to bring to the question of re-construction. They must see, at least, that any faction—by whatever combinations it may be sustained at the present time—that arrays itself in antagonism to the policy of the President for restoring the Union, will be ultimately and utterly overthrown in any appeal to the people. The existence of such an apprehension, upon the part of the radicals, is all that lends any coloring of probability perhaps, to the early realization of our hopes. The prospect of being ejected from place and of forfeiting the sweets of patronage will, if anything rational and tangible can, bring them to their senses and their knees. What his sop was to Cerberus, the "loaves and fishes" are to this modern Stygian brood.

In our own State, and throughout the entire South, it is altogether unnecessary to make any appeal to official messages in order to lead the current of popular sentiment. A party or faction that would, for an instant, even insinuate hostility to the method of reconstruction devised and approved by the Executive, would be swept out of existence in a whirlwind of popular indignation. Indeed, the disposition of our people towards Mr. Johnson is rapidly growing to be one of personal attachment. They experience towards him the same kind of feeling, that a man feels towards another, who has, almost alone and unsupported, taken him by the hand, when the storm of adversity lowered and friends and kindred "forsook him and fled."

The Norfolk Virginian, alluding to some depreciatory remarks of the correspondent of the London Times, relative to Greensboro' and the country in which it is situated, pays the following high compliment to both:

"Few inland towns in the country were more prosperous or "busy" before the war.

It is situated in the Piedmont country of North Carolina, in the midst of as fine a tobacco growing region as the sun ever shone upon.

The counties of Stokes, Caswell, Forsyth, and indeed all in that section, produced some of the highest grades of the narcotic weed, while every stream turned the spindles of a busy cotton factory.

It was not only the centre of an active trade in cotton and tobacco, but also the seat of a polished society, and several very large and flourishing institutions of learning.

Situated in the midst of a hardy and thriving population, it bids fair to recover something of its former prosperity, and to efface the marks of war which the Times' correspondent saw so painfully stamped upon it during his late visit."

Lewis Hanes, Esq.

We learn, from the Salem Press, that the Hon. Bedford Brown, being satisfied of Mr. Hanes' election to Congress, has waived all claims to the office. This is no more than we expected from Mr. Brown's high-toned personal integrity and life-long regard for the ascertained votes of the people.

Justices of the Peace.

How natural it is to measure other people by ourselves—to attribute to others motives which habit has fixed in us! Some people are so prone to treat those who differ with them politically with neglect and injustice, and to judge them harshly, purely on account of their opinions, that they measure other people by the same standard, concluding that others like themselves are incapable of rising above that level.

In our remarks upon the appointment of Justices of the Peace, we have neither said nor intimated, that we were in favor of having the new boards appointed from a certain class of men whose political opinions now or heretofore accorded with our own. So far from it, we have opposed altogether the idea, that politics should have any thing to do with the matter.

We are on principle opposed to placing men on the Supreme or Superior Court Bench, or appointing Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs or Clerks, because of their political views. These offices have nothing to do with partizan politics. Their duties connect them immediately with the preservation of the public peace, the protection of the persons and property of all the people, and they should be placed above all temptations to pander to the political prejudices of any portion of the people.

We have no prejudice against an out and out Union man, who preserved his consistency as a gentleman and a good citizen of the State during the war, nor against a secessionist who is an honest man, and who gives evidence that he accepts of the situation in good faith, by performing the duties of a good citizen. In a word, we have taken and maintained the position all along, that, in filling all offices not political, a man's previous political opinions should not be taken into the account, provided he is known to be a man of real reliability and worth, is loyal in the proper sense of that term, and is "both capable and honest"

Hence, in urging the Legislature to exercise an unwonted discretion in the selection of Justices of the Peace, we have designed nothing more than we have expressed: to select them from the very best men in the several counties—men most pure, most honest, most capable, and with sufficient moral courage to do their duty promptly and fearlessly. A cowardly skulk, an untrue man, a mere time server, a man with any taint upon his garments, or an inebriate, is unfit to occupy the seat of justice, or to be a conserver of the public peace. Such a rule would doubtless cut off some who impertinently claim to be better "Union men" than others better and more worthy. But the world knows that some very doubtful men call themselves "true Union men," and some very crooked men call themselves "strait."

University of North Carolina.

This time-honored institution will resume its operations on Friday, the 12th instant, and continue its usual session of twenty weeks. During the recent war, while it was greatly reduced in numbers, we believe it never once suspended its operations, as did most of the colleges of the South. True, its numbers were greatly decreased, but we learn from some of our young friends, who are now students there, that the number is gradually increasing, and the prospects of the college are very encouraging. At the last term there were about sixty students, and it is confidently believed that there will be at least double the number at the approaching term.

The two literary societies are in a very flourishing condition, and one of them—the Dialectic—is about collecting Confederate relics and compiling memoirs of their gallant members who fell during the late war. We are not advised whether the other society—the Philanthropic—is or not, but presume it is.

We wish the old college much success, as we do also its venerable and honored societies.

We cordially re-echo the aspiration of the Wilmington Dispatch, from which paper the foregoing extract is taken. If there be any one thing of which North Carolinians, in times past, have had reason to be proud, it has been their University. If every other salutary injunction of the framers of our State Constitution had been carried out in the same spirit with which that "requiring all useful learning to be duly encouraged and promoted in one or more Universities" has been, it would have been well for us, indeed.

The desire for education throughout our country is rather increased than diminished by four years of war, but the poverty of the people is such that comparatively few can afford a College education. As times improve, however, we hope to see our University exceeding, if possible, its former career of prosperity and usefulness, and, under the auspices of its present able Faculty, annually sending out its hundreds of educated young men to add to the character and reputation of the State.

THE KENTUCKY DEAD IN GEORGIA.—It will be a mournful satisfaction to the very many relatives and friends of the brave Kentuckians who fell upon every battle-field, to know that inquiries are being instituted so as to identify the burial place of each of these heroes. A full register will be prepared.—Louisville Courier.

This is a most commendable movement, and we should be pleased to see the example so worthily set by Kentucky followed by North Carolina. On hundreds of battle fields, from the Mississippi to the Susquehanna, her noble "unrecorded dead" lie buried. Whatever estimate history may place upon the cause for which they offered up their lives, it cannot fail to accord them the meed of unparalleled heroism, courage and fortitude. Their deeds of high emprise constitute a legacy of which the State must ever be proud. She owes it, then, to her own fame, no less than to the promptings of gratitude and humanity, to do all that can be done to rescue their names and their last resting places from neglect and oblivion.

"The Watchman."

Rev. Dr. Deems informs us, in a brief note from him in New York, that the first number of "The Watchman" will be out about the 18th of the present month. His friends in North Carolina will remember that he relies much upon their patronage to get the publication fully afloat. Send him the lists and the cash. The price is $2 for six months.

Decline in Gold.

The recent remarkable decline in gold indicates an increase of foreign confidence in the preservation of peace with the outside world and the speedy adjustment of our internal difficulties.—The tone of the President's message, and the exhibits of the Secretary of the Treasury, have had great influence in Europe in raising the standard of our national securities. Large orders for government bonds are coming from Europe.—Gold of course will seek investment in them, and, hence, United States bonds and promises to pay of all kinds must go up and gold must go down.

We are inclined to think if, the Southern States were at once restored, and the Mexican and English questions were settled amicably, greenbacks would be at par in six months.

Gen. H. G. Spruill.

On Tuesday, a gentleman just from Plymouth informed us that our friend, Gen. Spruill, had died about three weeks ago in Perquimans County. He seemed to have no doubt of the correctness of the information; hence we gave a brief obituary notice of him in yesterday's issue. Yesterday the mails brought us a letter from the General himself, dated the 2nd inst., informing us of his partial recovery from a severe attack of pneumonia, during which his life was despaired of. We are gratified in being able so soon to correct the error. May our excellent friend yet live many years!

OUR OUTSIDE.—The reader will not fail to be attracted by the interesting and brilliant article on our 4th page, entitled "The Days of the Giants in the United States Senate."

"Bill Arp's" last and best will be found on the 1st page. It is inimitable.

For the Sentinel.

MESSRS EDITORS:—I send you the following extract, translated from an article I find in the "Courier des Etats Unis," of New York City, and which throws much light upon a question which now engrosses the public mind of Europe, and which is pregnant with important events:

P.

A NEW QUESTION.

"There is passing at this moment, in Belgium, something strange and singular. King Leopold dies after a happy reign of more than thirty years, leaving behind him the renown of a model constitutional King of great moderation, and of a political intelligence that would have done honor to any of the first thrones of the world. By virtue of the Constitution, his son succeeds him. The sincere regrets that the departed King leaves behind him are changed into professions of devotion for the new King. Parties, unanimous in their grief, cease their quarrels before the inanimate body of the founder of the Belgian monarchy. Europe entire takes part in the grief of Belgium, and its sovereigns send to the young King the assurance of their sympathy. The Press of every country and of all opinions exhort the Belgians to unity and wisdom. It seems that the destinies of that small but interesting country have become the business of the whole world, and that the world conspires in its favor; and yet, notwithstanding that universal solicitude, it would be difficult to disprove, that a problem has just arisen upon the chess-board of Europe, and, we could say, without wandering from probability, that the unanimity of regrets is but the betrayal of universal uneasiness. Whence comes that uneasiness and what can be the object of it?

The existence of Belgium is recognised by treaties. The only country that could threaten her is France, and France, to-day, is, evidently, not possessed with the mania for conquests.—She is more intent, as we have seen in regard to Italy, upon making war, in order to deliver mankind from slavery and despotism. But Belgium is not enslaved—she is the freest country in the world. Not only does she belong to herself, but she enjoys, in all their plenitude, many liberties to which we are almost strangers. We have nothing to offer her under that head, whilst we might receive much from her. Again, we repeat, where is the danger for Belgium, and whence arises the uneasiness felt in regard to her? It seems to us, after mature reflection, that it is not the ambition of France, that it is not an external danger that threatens Belgium, but rather an internal condition of things which we, Frenchmen, have many motives for studying and well-understanding. Under the empire of absolute liberty, where the good sense and moderation of the Belgians have never permitted disorder to rise, two great currents of public opinion have been formed, two parties have sprung into existence, the clerical and liberal party. In order to ascertain their end and aims, there is no necessity for crossing the Belgian frontier; it is a study we can pursue around our own firesides.

The clerical party does not wish alone, as it affects to say among us, to adore God freely and in its own way; that right, that liberty it possesses in Belgium in all plenitude. But by a natural proneness of the human mind, that party aspires openly to modify institutions so as to make them conform to their doctrines—to make the secular government like that of the church—that is to say, to annihilate those liberties it has made use of in order to become powerful and gain immunities in Belgium. We must not blame the Catholic party for thus acting—it is its nature, the very essence of its system—its duty. How, indeed, having the power in its hands, could it tolerate the free-masons or the liberal thinkers, who, according to it, conduct the people to eternal damnation? If it makes use of liberty, it is for the purpose of gaining the ascendancy, and then suppressing liberty, which, according to it, is an invention of the devil and an instrument of perdition. So that, when the clergy claims liberty as it exists in Belgium, their sole and real aim is to arrive at the kind of liberty that exists at Rome.

The excess and madness of the clerical party in Belgium have naturally tended to arouse the passions of the liberal party, and to drive many of those composing it to extremes. Many liberals who, confronting more moderate adversaries, would have imposed upon themselves more restraint, have gone to the very extremity of their opinions. Free thought has ended in an absolute denial of all the reveries of the middle age. Clerical rigour tends to push liberalism out of every religious sentiment. It is a law of the moral, as well as the physical world, that reaction equals the motive power, and that which is particularly grave in Belgium, is, that the two parties are so equally balanced, that the loss of three or four votes would be sufficient to upset and change the principles of the government.—For some years the power has been in the hands of the liberals, and happily it is so, for the spirit of their doctrines forbid persecution. But if the power should pass to the clergy—if, in default of the intrinsic worth of their system, their more perfect discipline and their ability in propagandism and intrigue should put them in power, it would be difficult to avert troubles from the taking possession of the government by a party despotic by doctrine and conviction, aroused by the contest, and which might think itself sufficiently strong to attempt grave measures and impose silence upon the enemies of God."

CITY AND STATE ITEMS.

JAIL DELIVERY.—A white man by the name of Lyons, confined on the charge of horse-stealing, and two gentlemen of ebony hue incarcerated for some misdemeanor, effected their escape from our City jail on yesterday, by removing some bricks in the rear of the building. Their vacant places were soon supplied, however, by the advent of three others brought in on the charge of horse-theft. They were arrested about 10 miles west of the city, and one of the number, a man named Eli Damphier, was shot before being taken, though not seriously injured.

ICE.—The excessively cold weather of the past few days, though doubtless attended with much suffering to the poor, has not been without some compensatory advantage in enabling the owners of ice-houses to put up abundant supplies of that luxury, as well as comfort for the sick, for the next summer's use. We saw some being put up by the Messrs. Tucker, which was four inches in thickness,—the thickest that has been "gathered" in Raleigh for many years.

MILITARY AFFAIRS.—The following distribution of troops,—all of 128th Indiana,—has just been made for Raleigh and points West, viz:

Raleigh, Cos. B. E. & G., Capts. Barnett, Mills and Corbin; Salisbury, Cos. A. & H., Capts. Campbell and Powell; Charlotte, Cos. D. & K., Capts. Keith and Hinton; Morganton, Cos. C. & I., Capts. Frazier and Binnishall; Asheville, Co. F., Capt. Bliss.

The 120th Indiana regiment has been relieved and gone home.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.—We learn that, at the Government sales of horses and mules on yesterday, prices generally ranged very high.

OUR ADVERTISING COLUMNS.—The public are referred to-day to

W. J. Holleman's notice of horses stolen.

New Goods by the Messrs. Tucker.

Card of Jesse Brown (with Hart & Lewis).—Hardware and Cutlery.

EX-GOV. VANCE.—This gentleman passed through this city, on yesterday, en route for his home in Statesville.

QUALIFICATION OF THE JUDGES.—Hon. W. H. Battle, of the Supreme Court, and Hons. R. B. Gilliam, D. G. Fowle and Ralph B. Buxton, of the Superior Court, have taken the oaths of office within a few days.

Washington News.

[Correspondence of the Richmond Examiner.]

WASHINGTON, January 7.

Congress has re-assembled, but not in full numbers, and no legislation will take place till next week. The Reconstruction Committee will hold another meeting very soon. It is doubted whether they will immediately report in favour of the admission of the members elect from Tennessee, and, unless they favor it, the House will not, on their part, act on the subject. The Senate may take the initiative in this matter.

It is not believed that the President is urgent for the Southern members elect to demonstrate any anxiety for re-admission. That he does not regret or disapprove their policy in standing aloof for a while, is quite certain.

Some conservatives from the Northern States, who are not immediately connected with the Government, are here, and express the opinion that the Middle States will strongly support the President, in the event of the rupture which is inevitable.

The question is made whether the United States Supreme Court will take part on the side of the Executive or of Congress, in matters coming before it. The Judiciary is one of the co-ordinate branches of the Federal government. Generally it goes with the Executive, wherever it may lead. This has been the history of the Court. Some think that it will not now change its policy, and will, in any case pending between Congress and the Executive, as to the great question, whether the States lately in rebellion are in or out of the Union, go with the President. But the Court refuses to take cognizance of political questions, and will act on legal and practical matters. Cases of this kind are, however, likely to arise, and in fact there is one from the United States District Court of Louisiana which may bring about a very important decision on this subject. It will be found that the tendency of the Court will be to support the views of the Executive. We shall see.

The Reconstruction Committee have before them Carl Schurz's elaborate report on the political condition of the South, which was the result of his six month's tour through that region, and which concludes with the recommendation that before those States shall be re-admitted into the Union, one or more committees of Congress should be sent through them for a more thorough investigation. The committee have come to no conclusion upon this or any other proposition.

These measures, when reported, must undergo the ordeal of the two Houses, and the Senate will be slow to agree to any theory which will commit the body to a decided antagonism with the President's policy. The committee will first act upon the question of the recognition of Tennessee as a loyal State. When they shall decide that affirmatively, as they may do, they must go on, for controversy's sake, and admit members from other States.

Horace Greeley is here again upon his mission of peace. He comes, like Mercury, to interpose between the wavering elements—the Executive and the Legislative branches of the Government. At one moment he is waxing the President, and at the next, he is manipulating the radical leaders of Congress. It is vain that he urges upon some of the latter the expediency of saving for the party the spoils of victory.—The party assumes that it is strong enough to put gown the President, if he cannot be moulded to their will. This conceit must be taken out of them, and will be, ere long. The President's policy works slowly, but with certainty. Florida is coming forward to his aid, and soon Texas will follow. Then the President's opportunity will arrive. Then he may say, "Up, guards."

The President will have a fine opportunity to commence now upon the radicals in this city. He can begin with the city post-office, as well recommended by the people of the city almost unanimously. Ultimately, and ere long, he will be obliged to establish in politics a "dead line."

If You are threatened with Pneumonia, read the following from Capt. W. P. Davis, of Petersburg, Virginia:

"Sympathy for the suffering prompts me to certify that my servant man was suffering in the last stage of pneumonia, throwing up matter and blood in large quantities; his case was considered hopeless, so much so, that there was no medical prescription used for his recovery; I regarded him as good as dead. Hearing of the great cures made by the SOUTHERN HEPATIC PILLS, I thought that I would try an experiment on him; without any hope of success however, I gave the Pills in large doses; in a short time, to my great surprise, there was a change for the better. I continued giving them to him until he became a perfectly sound man. He is now attending to his work with as much strength and vigor as he ever did. With his case, and what I have seen and heard of the good effect of these Pills, I do most earnestly recommend them as the best family medicine I have ever seen or used."

IMPORTANT SALE.

ON WEDNESDAY, THE 24TH OF JANUARY, 1866, I shall offer at public sale my plantation in Bertie County, lying on the [illegible] river three miles from its mouth on said river and six from the village of Windsor, containing 900 acres more or less, [illegible] cured and well adapted to the growth of cotton, corn, wheat, &c.

There is every inducement to make a large crop to [illegible] for hands for the next year, as there is a compost [illegible] made to manure nearly 200 acres. The [illegible] made in 1864-65 [illegible] pounds of cotton and 6000 bushels of corn; and, with proper management will do [illegible] better for the next year, as the most of the cotton land has had rest for the past two years. [illegible] over great advantage which this farm has, in its convenience to transportation being only one mile to a good landing on the river where there is a regular line of steamers to Norfolk weekly. In addition to the above, this is the only river farm in this portion of the county that has fire wood enough, conveniently for use; there is an abundance of [illegible] timber of almost every kind, cypress, oak, hickory, ash, gum &c. Lumber dealers would do well to examine the land before the day of sale.

[illegible] rent for 300 acres on this tract unenclosed, which affords fine range for hogs and a free access to [illegible] acres of [illegible] lands renders it very profitable for the raising of cattle, colts &c.

The improvements consist of a gin house and cotton screw, overseer's house, cabins enough for 25 or 30 laborers, corn barns &c. At the same time and place, I shall sell 200 or 300 barrels of corn, fodder, mules, horses, hogs, farming utensils, &c.

Terms for the land: one third cash, the balance in two equal instalments, payable respectively in 12 and 18 months, with the titles retained until payments made. For the personal property, cash.

For any further particulars, address the subscriber at Enfield Halifax county, N. C.

DAILY SENTINEL.

WE. E. PELL, Proprietor.

The Days of the Giants in the United States Senate---Clay Calhoun and Webster.

A correspondent of the Times and Witness, of Chicago, who witnessed the United States Senate in "the days of the Giants," furnishes from Washington the following graphic picture of "Auld lang Syne" in that city:

Gibbon relates the celebrated story of the Seven Sleepers. During a cruel persecution at Ephesus, seven noble youths concealed themselves in a cave. They immediately, so goes the legend, fell into a deep sleep, which was miraculously prolonged for one hundred and eighty seven-years. On awaking they entered the city, but found, everywhere, Christians so degenerated, churches so conformed to the world, all, in short so changed, that they burst into tears and earnestly prayed to God that they might return to their slumbers again.—Such are my feelings as I sit here and look upon this body, and listen to their debates, with the light of other days around me. Only a few years ago I occupied this very seat, and heard, with pleasure, the great men of the land deliberating for the general weal of the whole nation. Now, how many seats are vacant; and the discussions are about the late war, the treatment of rebellion, and the reconstruction of a shattered Union; topics, the very sound of which might cause the founders of this great Republic to turn in their coffins.

Among many sad reflections, there is one which especially depresses my heart, as I look down on this conclave of grave, venerable, and patriotic Senators. It is, that there survives not a single one of those statesmen whose voices used to be heard and felt throughout the entire country. Once it was a great privilege to pass a morning here, when "there were giants in the land." Yonder reposed, in silent grandeur, the massy form of Mr. Webster. To his right, taking snuff and conversing pleasantly with his neighbors, was the light, graceful person of Mr. Clay; while far to the left, dark, sombre, with keen, flashing eyes, was that incarnation of dignity and severe logic, Mr. Calhoun, looking like a cast-iron man. Whenever either of these men was to speak, the chamber was crowded early in the day, and everybody studied their speeches. And with reason; for in genius and true parliamentary eloquence, they were men of pre-eminent greatness, differing intellectually and morally, very much as they did in their personal appearance.

So remarkable were the head and figure of the Massachusetts Senator that, when he was in London, the porters and day-laborers in the streets used to cease from their work to gaze at him; and here each day, as he entered the Senate, all eyes converged toward "the man," and the whisper was heard on all sides in the galleries, "That is he." Everything in his presence was imperial. For myself, I never looked upon that brow, that majestic aspect, those "Atlantean shoulders, fit to bear the weight of mighty monarchies," that face, on which "deliberation sat, and public care," without a something, I know not what, of awe and reverence which I could not shake off, even in familiar conversation with him. As a writer, his style is the very best in our language; not so elaborated as Dr. Channing's, but easier, more flowing and transparent. Mrs. Fanny Kemble told me that her father, a man of exquisite taste, used often to say to her, "Come, let us read Webster; his style does me good." In many passages, especially in his argument on the trial of the Knapps, and in his reply to Gen. Hayne, that was true of him which was said of Luther: "His words are half battles." But he was a tame, ponderous speaker. In the peroration of his speech on Foote's resolutions, he glowed as with ethereal fire; but generally he was dull, heavy phlegmatic. He was a perfect master of language. Most public speakers find words exceedingly unmanageable things. At his command the best, fittest phrases came and fell "into perfect phalanx." His logic was perfect, also, demolishing everything like error, "hammering way," "smashing everything in its path," (to use the pithy words of our two great Generals,) but it was not "logic on fire;" and his orations will always receive more admiration when read than they did when delivered. His address at the completion of Bunker Hill Monument is itself a monument of classical taste, of profound thought, of elevated statesmanship, which will outlast the solid granite. Yet Mr. Choate, who was on the platform with him, tells us that he never suffered more in his life, the delivery was such a failure.

Much has been said as to the morality of Mr. Webster, but de mortuis nil nisi bonum. Of one trait in his character I can testify. I mean his great reverence for the Bible. When I first came to this city, I found that buying male slaves and sending them South was a regular business, and I was so shocked that I went to Washington to see if anything could be done to stop so nefarious a traffic. In conversing with him on the subject of slavery, I found that he was most anxious that some measure should be inaugurated for its gradual abolition. He confessed, however, that he could not see any remedy, and thought it a vulnus immedicabile. But whenever I quoted a passage from the Word of God, he always received it as the truth to which all should yield entire obedience.

In this reverent submission to the sacred Oracles, I grieve to say Mr. Calhoun was as inferior to Mr. Webster as he was superior to him in the unimpeachable purity of his moral character. I knew him well, both in Washington and at Fort Hill, his residence in South Carolina, and I never knew a man more upright, conscientious and virtuous. He was, too, a somewhat regular attendant of the Episcopal Church in Pendleton, though never a communican in any church. But his intellectual pride and independence made him intolerant of any authority higher than his own reason. He professed to believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, but, forgetting that important part of knowledge which informs us of the limitation of the human understanding—jealous of faith, lest it should be credulity—accustomed to inquire as to every doctrine, not whether it was conformable to God's will, but to his own; loving truth, yet loving system more than truth; satisfying himself that he had established his point, if he could show the objections to any one position, without considering those to all others; in short, never suspecting his own judgment, always confident in his own decisions, and therefore resolved that no argument could be adduced which might change his opinions, he knew nothing of that humble, teachable spirit which is the great element in Christian faith. He sincerely regarded slavery as a divine and beneficent institution. "The negro and the white man," he said to me, "are both elevated by it."

If I quoted a text which expressed his views he would give it his hearty assent, and dwell upon its certainty. But if it condemned his cherished convictions, he as promptly questioned it. I was with him during his last illness, and upon one occasion, when I cited that command, "Honor all men," he turned quickly to me and said, "What, honor all men! Never, impossible, God never said that. God cannot require me to honor the man in the White House, nor the unprincipled politicians, the selfish demagogues, now in both Houses of Congress, who are bringing ruin on the country."

Of his power of conversation a great many have spoken; but in fact he never conversed; he harangued as earnestly when alone with you as when in the legislative halls. He loved the society of young men, and won their hearts by the courtesy and condescension with which he listened to them. It was, however, only that politeness which was a striking trait in his character. If he paused to listen, it was but the interval between the flashes of lightning, which soon blazes out again, smiting and shivering all opposition.

As an orator he was a perfect contrast to Mr. Webster. It is well known to his friends that he proposed Demosthenes as his model, and studied closely those Grecian masterpieces to which all who know what eloquence means, how it is as high above mere rhetoric as the heavens are above the earth, will ever look up in admiration and rapture. If, in his well-known remark about "Action" as the essential ingredient in speaking, Demosthenes meant graceful gesticulations, the South Carolinian was utterly defective. There was something stiff, angular, awkward in his manner. But nobody, unless it be a teacher of rhetoric, can ever thus degrade those words of deep and noble wisdom. No, again, No. It was not by the puerile tricks and starts of an accomplished declaimer that the Athenian

"Wielded at will the fierce democracy,
Shook the arsenal, and fulmined over Greece,
To Macedon and Artaxerxe's throne."

By "Action" he meant Delivery, earnest, impassioned Delivery, in which the whole soul is fused into every utterance, and which can no more live and glow with any thing artificial than fire and straw can dwell together in a heated oven. Who can listen to a more finished rhetorician than Mr. Everett? His face and person were pleasing. Every movement had been practiced. His beautiful passages filled the mind with admiration and delight. But who ever felt his heart burn within him; who was ever conscious of that "something immense and infinite" of which Quintillian speaks; who ever found himself transported, melted to tears, fired to enthusiasm, while listening to his elaborate compositions? In straight-forward, close-linked argument, in a noble contempt for all trappings and decorations, in condensation, in a vocabulary terse and emphatic, in energy, vehemence, passion, Mr. Calhoun closely resembled his illustrious model; while in all the moral qualifications of a great orator he rose immeasurably above him. For even his enemies confessed that he possessed a courage which no opposition could shake and an integrity which no temptation could corrupt.

In mental greatness, in learning, deep thought, and all the attributes of the highest order of genius, Mr. Clay was inferior to his two great contemporaries. But in the physical combinations, in all the natural furniture of a soul-stirring orator, he far surpassed them both.

His mouth, that most expressive feature, was an organ created by God for the pronunciation of large and heroical thoughts. Then, what clear blue eyes, now calm in their azure depths, then laughing in genial mirth, and then, when he was thoroughly roused up, sparkling, almost blazing. In his whole countenance what play of all generous feelings; the soul of honor, friendship, chivalry, breathing in his face. Above all that magnificent voice; at one moment soft and breezy; presently swelling until it beat the vaulted roof, and reverberated far beyond the walls of the chamber, away into the adjoining rooms and recesses. Rufus Choate had no superior at home, but going to Washington as a United States Senator, he, on one occasion, drew upon himself a single broadside from the Kentucky orator, and it so frightened him that he was afterward almost silent, crest-fallen, and (to employ his own favorite phrase) "utterly flabbergasted." Everybody remembers Mr. Clay's duel with Mr. Randolph. On his last journey North in an almost dying condition, the Virginian was carried into the Senate Chamber. Mr. Clay was speaking. "Stop," said the sick man to those who bore him. "Stop, let me hear that voice. I came here to hear that voice once more before I die." The grace and beauty of Mr. Clay's elocution were consummate; his whole being informed with his subject, and instinct with the love of truth. And his warm gushing sympathies seldom failed to draw you to him, and bear you along with him, causing you to feel that "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin." The last time I heard him was at a meeting of the Colonization Society.—As he reclined in the chair, he seemed to be an old man, "broken with the storms of State."—But when he arose and spoke, there were no traces of years upon him. All felt that his soul was still erect and young, and that, as an orator, his eye was not dimmed, nor the force and vehemence of his strength abated.

I had intended to say something of his death, but this communication is already too extended. His father was a Baptist minister, and the son never forgot "the faithful saying" which he learned from that father. And though he betrayed sad infirmity as to religion, saying to Dr. Curtis, in Charleston, that "a public man ought to join no church, if he wished to be popular," (a sentiment, by the way, on which thousands act without the candor to confess it,) and after he had identified himself with a church, frequenting the theatre; yet he lingered long under the salutary discipline of a sick room, his last pillow was wetted with penitential tears, and, of the three great compeers, he alone departed confessing himself a sinner, and reposing all his confidence upon the blood and righteousness of the Redeemer.

I sit here and look at the places which once knew these three men, but now know them no more, and I say, O that they were with us yet! Whatever their errors once, were they now living, I believe that in this crisis of our country's history, their counsels would be those of moderation, wisdom, and patriotism. Whatever their differences in other days, had they been spared, I am confident that, after the terrible lessons of the last four years, they would have buried all animosities, and with one heart and one mind have sought to quell the passions of the hour, and to lay broadly and deeply the foundation of a union, harmony, liberty, prosperity, which nothing could again disturb.—Their absence at a time like this fills me with regret and sadness. But "the Lord reigneth." "In the year when King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord high and lifted up." The prophet mourned for the loss of a wise and able prince; but he found consolation by raising his eyes to that King who sits exalted in the heavens, upon the throne of the universe, ordering all events for his glory, and for the accomplishment of the designs of unerring wisdom and unchanging love.

THE CAPE FEAR.—The water is still very high in the Cape Fear river, no perceptible fall having as yet taken place. We hear of some losses from the freshet, and some damage to flats that have been carried by the current against trees or drift wood. The condition of the river now is a guaranty of uninterrupted navigation during the winter and spring.—Wil. Dispatch.

The youngest son of the great Patrick Henry died in Floyd county, Virginia, in 1854, in circumstances of extreme destitution. The Legislature of the State was appropriating thousands on a marble statue of the father at every time the son was begging his bread.
